A SKETCH OF THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE

Hartford Bank,

AND OF ITS INFLUENCE UPON THE GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF HARTFORD.

EVERY citizen of Hartford has a just cause for pride in his city. Its fame as a financial center; as a city of comfortable homes, of beautiful parks, of lovely drives; as a place where wealth, comfort, and refinement combine to make life almost ideal in its possibilities,—all go to make Hartford one of the notable cities of this country. It is rich also in tradition. One of the oldest cities of New England, being founded in 1635, it has been one most truly representative of that quality of vital, civilizing force known as New England character.

In its early beginnings, Hartford was ambitious. It procured a municipal charter in 1784, and early acquired a very considerable commerce with the West Indies, sometimes even sending its wares as far as London, Amsterdam, and the Mediterranean. Its local industries were chiefly agriculture and trade,—the latter being, of course, mostly domestic, but resolutely aggressive in its character, inasmuch as Hartford practically commanded the trade of the Connecticut valley far up towards the sources of the river.

Business in those days, however, was carried on under many and great disadvantages. At the outbreak of the Revolution prosperity was general, but the financial necessities of the war caused the Continental Congress to force upon the public issues of paper money, which after the war was ended brought serious evils upon the people. With peace and the attempted development of a new prosperity, naturally came heavy importations of foreign goods, which, owing to the exhausted condition of industry and the consequent scarcity of exportable commodities, had to be paid for in actual cash. The country, therefore, became drained of coin, both silver and gold, and all that was left to the luckless inhabitant for use in his business transactions was the depreciated currency issued by Congress. Nobody knew from day to day what a "dollar" of paper money was worth, and therefore nobody wanted it. The only recourse the people had was to barter,—that is, the exchange of their wares one for another, on such terms as could be arranged. Naturally, this method of doing business became unbearable, and the wise heads of Hartford began to cast about in their minds for some means of relief to themselves.

It was soon recognized that the need was for a bank that would command the confidence of the community and furnish a currency for local use.

The Connecticut Courant (now the Hartford Courant) in its issue of January 23, 1792, discussed the situation at great length, and active measures were soon taken by the master spirits of the town, which resulted in a conference of interested citizens on February 27, 1792, at a leading tavern* in Hartford, where it was proposed to petition the General Assembly for a charter for a bank. John Trumbull, Chauncey Goodrich, and Noah Webster were appointed a committee to prepare and present such a petition. On May 3d, books were opened for subscriptions to the capital stock of a bank; by the 14th of the month the capital of $100,000 was all subscribed and the petition presented to the Legislature, with such favorable result as warranted a meeting of the stockholders, on June 14, 1792, for the organization of the Bank. Jeremiah Wadsworth,† John Caldwell, John Morgan, George Phillips, Barnabas Deane, Timothy Burr, James Watson,† Caleb Bull,† and Ephraim Root were elected as Directors,—with John Caldwell, President, and Hezekiah Merrill,† Cashier; and on August 8, 1792, a little less than eight months from the time the Courant first made a public appeal for the consideration of a bank, the doors of the Hartford Bank were opened to the public for business.

It might seem that eight months was a very long time to take for the work accomplished, and in order better to appreciate the result in its true significance, it may be interesting to give some further account of the conditions existing in Hartford in 1792.

†The residences or places of business of each of these gentlemen are indicated on the same Diagram.

The population of the entire township, then extending westward to Farmington, slightly exceeded four thousand persons. State Street ran towards the river only as far as Front Street, and there was no bridge across the Connecticut. Main Street from Morgan to the south meetinghouse was bordered by scattered residences, with here and there a shop or tavern. Trumbull Street was out in the country, and appropriately called Back Street. The "city" was barely more than a provincial village, and the income of its citizens was derived chiefly from agriculture and trade,—manufactures being few and, for the most part, primitive and rudimentary. In wealth, Hartford ranked as the seventh town in the State, coming after Norwalk, Lebanon, Middletown, Guilford, Fairfield, and Wethersfield in the order named. What Hartford lacked in material possessions, however, she accounted for in the energy and mental power of her leading citizens; and it was due to their sagacity and farsightedness that she gradually acquired the leading position among the cities of the State, which she has ever since successfully maintained.

Colonel Jeremiah Wadsworth was really the founder of the Hartford Bank. An intimate associate of Robert Morris, Alexander Hamilton, and others celebrated for their brilliant services in financing the affairs of the country both during and after the war, he was preeminently fitted to arouse and shape local public opinion in all matters pertaining to finance. He not only had been closely connected with four of the first six banks formed after the separation of the Colonies from Great Britain, in addition to holding a directorship in the first United States Bank, established in 1791, but he was the largest subscriber in organizing the Bank of North America in Philadelphia, in 1782, and was, at the urgent request of Alexander Hamilton, elected in 1785 President of the Bank of New York, serving one year in that office. He was the wealthiest citizen of Hartford, and foremost of all men in her service.

That it was at all possible to organize here a bank and subscribe its capital stock was due entirely to the personal influence of Colonel Wadsworth and the men he was able to associate with him. Not only the directors of the Hartford Bank, but the stockholders were selected citizens. Hartford and the neighboring towns were carefully canvassed for such men as would give dignity and character to the institution about to be created, in order that it might command at once the confidence of the public which it wished to serve. Much solicitation and urging were required, and progress was necessarily slow; but energy, intelligence, and character finally were successful, and the Hartford Bank became a reality. Colonel Wadsworth was chosen as the first President of the Bank; but he declined to serve, and John Caldwell was then elected.

As near as is definitely known, the Bank was first located on the south side of Pearl Street (then known as Prison Street), a few steps from Main; and it remained there till 1811, when it moved to the present location at 58 State Street. Naturally all its arrangements and conveniences were of the most primitive kind. Its money was kept in a chest of thin, wrought iron, deposited every night in a subterranean vault, covered by a massive door, which was raised and lowered by a pulley. The chest is now in the custody of the Connecticut Historical Society, and when one remembers the important use to which it was put, it cannot but be considered an interesting relic of former days.

Though its surroundings and methods were crude, the purpose of the Bank was serious and earnest. It began business with thirty per cent. of its capital paid in, but there are no indications of the nature of its funds. Silver coin was scarce, and gold scarcer. Continental currency was nearly worthless, having been funded by the Government at the rate of one hundred dollars of paper to one of coin; and probably Colonel Wadsworth was the only man in Hartford who possessed such a thing as a bank account. The only banks then in existence were the Bank of North America, Philadelphia, chartered in 1782; the Bank of New York, organized and in operation in 1784; the Bank of Massachusetts, Boston, chartered in 1784; the Providence Bank, opened for business in 1791; and the first United States Bank and its branches, chartered by Congress in 1791.

Doubtless, therefore, the Hartford Bank's assets were largely the promissory notes of the subscribers to its capital stock, unless some of those worthy men met their subscriptions in the same way that certain of the Directors of the Bank contributed to the special building fund of Christ Church. To that Major John Caldwell, the President of the Bank, contributed £10 in "pure spirit"; John Morgan gave £36 in building materials; Barnabas Deane gave £10 in rum, and Noah Webster, Jr., a stockholder in the Bank, met his obligation of £3 to the church in seven dozen spelling-books.

But whatever its assets were, the Hartford Bank courageously faced its mission, which was, first, to furnish the much-needed local currency; and, second, to gather to itself in the shape of deposits the slender funds hitherto scattered in the hands of many persons, and thereby render them available as loanable funds to such enterprising citizens as deserved credit as borrowers. The bills of the bank won confidence slowly, so disastrous had been the general experience with paper money; but again energy, intelligence, and character won the day, and not only did the Hartford Bank's issues of currency find acceptance at home, but over a wide territory as well. The Bank's charter was carefully and conservatively drawn, having been modeled after the one drawn by Alexander Hamilton for the Bank of New York. Caution and conservatism characterized every act of its management, and all its transactions combined to give the Bank a credit that extended in the course of a few years not only throughout the Connecticut valley, but to the shores of Lake Erie, at that time the western boundary of settlement.

In the decade following the establishment of the Hartford Bank, the city of Hartford prospered, and her population increased thirty per cent., against five per cent. for the State at large. The Bank had justified the wisdom of its founders, and fulfilled its two-fold mission. The people not only received its bills in payment of debts due them, but they deposited with the Bank their own funds for safe keeping. Against those deposits, up to a safe limit, the Bank issued its bills, which gave it resources, other than its paid-in capital stock, with which to make loans to borrowers. Not only were the scattered means of the people thus brought together in tangible, available shape, but it was soon learned that a credit on the books of the Bank against which a check could be drawn was just as good as coin in hand, while being safer, more convenient, and less expensive. The result of all this was a most effective re-arrangement and healthful expansion of the resources of the community, which gave to local enterprise new life and energy.

In 1792 a bank could afford to be autocratic, even though it were struggling to win the public favor. The Hartford Bank early established rules to which it rigorously adhered; but these rules were generally calculated to cultivate a prompt, business-like conduct of affairs, and as such they doubtless had most beneficial effect on the patrons of the Bank, and through them upon the community at large. For instance, a proposal for discount had to be made on a given day, and the borrower had to wait till the day following for an answer. He must enclose his note, the amount expressed in dollars, in a letter addressed to the Cashier, and the note must be executed in Hartford; it must have either as drawer or endorser a resident of Hartford, and it could not run more than forty-five days. Payments of money were never subject to revision; any error had to be discovered before the money was taken off the counter. Any person who did not punctually pay his note was refused further discount, and one allowing himself to be sued had his name posted in the Bank.

The above were all reasonable rules, albeit somewhat autocratically expressed in terms. The Directors could make rules for themselves, however, as rigorous as those intended for the public; and it was voted that all questions of discount be determined by ballot, with two negatives fatal to the discount. A note once refused was not to be tried again. No reason was to be given out of the Bank for the refusal of a discount; and last, but most important of all, "what passes in the Bank not to be spoke on at any other place." Those words might well be written in large letters on the four walls of the Directors' Room of every bank to-day!

It will be noticed that in the rule for the proposal of a note for discount it was required that the note be expressed in "dollars." The English system of pounds, shillings, and pence was generally used in the United States in 1792, but the Hartford Bank, at the beginning, adopted the decimal system, and thereby took the lead in introducing it into Connecticut. The Federal Government had adopted the decimal system in 1785-6, and the Connecticut

State government followed in 1795-7. It is worth noting as a tribute to the far-seeing intelligence and independent courage of the Directors of the Hartford Bank, that they abandoned the use of a system of accounting which was deeply rooted in the prejudice of the people, and which did not entirely disappear from use in this country till seventy-five years later.

For the first twenty odd years of its existence the history of the Hartford Bank is largely the history of Hartford and of Connecticut. The men who composed the "Hartford Bank crowd" were leaders not only in matters of finance, but in church and State, and it was by them that the seeds of underwriting were early planted in Hartford. No affair of public interest was too large, and probably none too small, to escape the watchful eye and powerful hand of the Hartford Bank. The growth in wealth and importance of the city, whose necessities it so ably and faithfully served, were reflected in its own development. From time to time as business conditions seemed to warrant, or ambition to impel, the Directors and Stockholders increased the Bank's capital, until in 1816 it amounted to $1,212,800. Legislative sanction was necessary to this occasional increase of capital, and, in order to secure from the legislature such sanction, special privileges as stockholders had been given by the Bank to schools, churches, charitable institutions, and to the State of Connecticut.

History repeated itself with respect to the Hartford Bank as it became rich and powerful.

Man abhors a monopoly as Nature abhors a vacuum, and for much the same reason,—he wants to "get there" himself. Rival aspirants for wealth, power, and the privilege of serving the public arose and successfully established themselves; and although the Hartford Bank still continued to grow and prosper, it was forced to divide honors and profits with its ambitious competitors.

In historical importance and special dignity the Hartford Bank has to-day but four rivals among the Banks of the United States. Incorporated during the first term of the first President of the United States, almost at the very beginning of Hartford's life as a city, and soon after the close of a long and costly war which had sapped the energy, shaken the faith, and sadly taxed the resources of the people; created because it had a work to do in up-building the city whose name it took, and which it has not taken in vain; organized by men selected because of their character and responsibility as citizens and men of affairs, many of them being prominent in the Nation as well as in the State; administered to the honor of its founders, the profit of its stockholders, and the welfare of the community for more than a generation before any rival could successfully raise its head,—the Hartford Bank stands pre-eminent among the banking institutions of Hartford, if not of the whole of New England. The loyal citizen of Hartford can justly be proud not only of his beautiful city, but of the "old Hartford Bank," and the prominent position it holds among the Banks of the United States.

This sketch of the early history of the Hartford Bank would not be complete without a word about the Bank as it stands to-day. There are now many eager competitors in the field where once it stood alone; but, nevertheless, it has prospered. In 1865 it entered the National system of banks with a capital of $1,132,800, which was increased in 1882 to the present capital of $1,200,000. Since its organization as a National Bank it has paid in dividends to its stockholders the sum of $3,967,008,00, in addition to the accumulation of Undivided Profits, which on June 1, 1902, amounted to $720,916.66, of which $328,-659.98 were carried forward from its accumulated earnings under the State charter. In Capital and Surplus Profits the Hartford Bank is to-day the largest National Bank in New England outside of Boston, and of the thirty-nine National Banks in that city only nine exceed it. It can therefore "point with pride" not only to its record of one hundred and ten eventful years, but to its strength and prosperity to-day.

§ The SEVEN COPPER CLUB met at this tavern, so called from the amount which each member spent on the evening they met, viz., SEVEN COPPERS, for half a mug of flip. This club consisted of elderly men, who met to learn the news, &c. Mr. Butler kept a very respectable tavern; he would not suffer any of his customers who resided in town to remain in his house after 9 o'clock at night; if they asked for any more liquor after they had drank their half mug, his reply was, "No, you sha'nt have another drop! go home to your families."

THINGS WORTH BEARING IN MIND.

Your money is safer when deposited in a Bank than when hidden in your house or carried on your person.

When you deposit your money in a Bank you not only insure its safety but its usefulness,—inasmuch as the Bank lends it out to legitimate borrowers who need it in their business.

A person opens a bank account primarily for his own convenience, but at the same time he incurs an obligation to the Bank taking his account.

Every account costs a Bank something. It gets its compensation from the use of the money left in the Bank. Money checked out the day it is deposited can not be used by the Bank.

A fair account is one which carries a balance large enough to repay to the Bank the expense involved by it. A good account is one which shows a profit over and above that expense. The only really bad account is one that is frequently overdrawn.

The only safe way to avoid overdrawing an account is to have the money deposited in the Bank before drawing a check against it.

One does not need to have "lots" of money in order to obtain a bank account. Generally speaking, the having a bank account encourages the accumulation of money and the cultivation of business-like habits.

No Bank expects that each one of its accounts will always show a profit. It takes a small account expecting that it will grow larger, and often retains a poor account in the hope it will become better.

A Bank is not a charitable institution, but it can afford to show a favor to-day in anticipation of a profit to-morrow. Its gratitude to its patrons, however, is not wholly "a lively sense of favors yet to come."

A Bank is not necessarily an aristocratic institution. Its real source of strength and usefulness is to be found in the confidence and patronage of "the people."

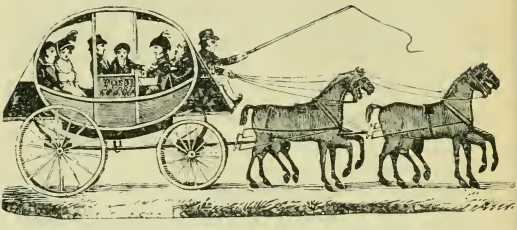
An imposing exhibit of material resources gives a Bank standing in the financial world, but patience, courtesy and a kindly touch of warm blooded good fellowship are necessary to give a Bank standing with "the people."

No man can afford to "hide his light under a bushel." Times change and conditions with them. The sufficient methods of the past are not necessarily the best methods of to-day. The ambitious man does not sit down and wait for his "opportunity" to find him, but he looks it up and tries to meet it half way.

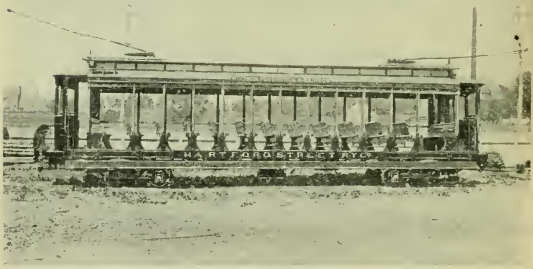
A Bank is a corporation, but a corporation is no other than an "artificial person, created by law." What is true of a person may, therefore, be equally true of a corporation, and the same rules may apply to it.

Advertising is simply one method of meeting opportunities half way, and letting it be known that opportunities are wanted.

INTERIOR OF BANK.



In the early days of the Hartford Bank the above conveyance was considered not only comfortable but luxurious. It represents the old Post Coach between New Haven and Hartford.



This cut of the latest style of the modern trolley car shows what is demanded by the public to-day.

WRIGHT'S

Street List

Rapid Transit Guide

To the

CITY OF HARTFORD

And Vicinity

Copyright 1902, by Geo. E. Wright.

EXPLANATION.

The object of this Guide is to show the electric car service to any point within the City Limits, and also the suburban service. It is intended to be general and permanent in character, for which purpose the maximum interval of the running of the cars on each line is given.

ABBREVIATIONS.

The following abbreviations are used: av., avenue; ct., court; pl., place; ter., terrace; hgts., heights; al., alley; n., north; e., east; s., south; w., west: cr., crosses; fr., from.

STREETS.

In the Street List the word "street" is understood in all cases where avenue, court, place, terrace, etc., are not given.

Figures at the beginning or left of the lines indicate street numbers at intersections and crossings.

Figures or letters at the end or right of lines refer to the List of Car Lines, on page 4, and show what line or lines of cars pass the point of destination it is desired to reach, or the nearest point to it. The Capital Letters refer to groups of car lines (on page 6), any one of which passes the point in question, or the nearest point to it. The one passing the nearest is given first.

CAR LINES.

The point of departure is assumed to be City Hall Square in all cases except the Third-Rail Electric, which leaves the Union Station.

The names given to the various lines are intended to be the same as those which appear upon the car signs.

The time given at the end of the route of each line is the regular yearly schedule, without regard to extras in summer or on special occasions.

TRANSFERS

Are given for a continuous passage between any two points within the five-cent limit, and must be used on the first car arriving, on the connecting line for which it is issued.

Hartford Street List and Electric Car Service.

EXAMPLES.

To Find any Street or Street Corner.

Take the following illustration: If it is desired to know where the corner of Farmington avenue and Sigourney street is located and how to reach it by trolley, first find Farmington Avenue, in black type, in the List which begins on the next page, and then under that head in small type, find Sigourney street. At the beginning or left of that line are seen the figures 185, which indicates the number on Farmington avenue at which Sigourney street crosses. At the end or right of the line is seen the capital letter G, which refers to "Groups of Car Lines," on page 6, and shows that four lines of cars pass that corner, as follows: Elizabeth Park, Farmington and Unionville, Prospect Avenue South, and West Hartford. The black figures preceding the name of each of these four car lines refers to the "List of Car Lines," which begins on page 4, where is shown what sign to look for on the car, or the color of the night signal lights, if any; also, the streets which the car passes through from the time it leaves City Hall till it returns to that point; and, lastly, how often the cars run. If, at the end or right of the line, are found figures instead of letters, they refer directly to the "List of Car Lines," beginning on page 4.

Banks, Public Buildings, Etc.

As an illustration, should it be desired to find and to reach the Hartford National Bank, turn to "Public Buildings, Etc.," on page 27; find alphabetically, on the same page, the heading "Banks" in black type; and under that head, also alphabetically, in black type, find the word "Hartford" which is given as 58 State Street, while at the end of the line is found the letter "A," and upon referring back to the "Groups of Car Lines," on page 6, it is found that the letter "A" indicates "All cars," which means that any electric street railway car in the City will convey passengers to the Hartford National Bank.

THE FIRST STATE HOUSE ERECTED IN HARTFORD. (1719.)

It stood on the plot in front of our present City Hall (or old State House), which was completed in 1796, when it was removed to Church street, on a lot adjoining the Christ Church, and, after having been used for various purposes, was finally torn down.
